Jesus teaches in Mark 10:18, "No one is good but God alone." "Good" is such an all-purpose term, especially for children, that it loses any real sense of meaning. To help children better understand what it means that God is good, have them cut out large yellow or orange circles and inch-wide strips of paper.

Teaching your kids to follow their gut instincts can help keep them safe, healthy, and happy both in childhood and beyond. "Teaching kids how to trust their own inner guidance versus seeking outside sources that so often can be conflicting with our own wants and needs, is a helpful tool as they grow and develop," says Sylvester.

Teaching children the Catholic values of philanthropy and charity when they are impressionable might help stave off some of that adolescent cynicism which will inevitably occur as they get older. More importantly, it will inculcate in them a life-long pattern of thinking of how they can help children and families in desperate situations.
